

Some features of colloquial Indonesian seen on native Javanese and Lampungnese speakers in Lampung

Sri Budi Lestari (Ritsumeikan Asia Pasific University, Lecturer)

This study will try to provide some informations on features of colloquial Indonesian spoken by speakers in Lampung province. Since it is located on the tip of southern Sumatra and has multi-ethnic population, colloquial Indonesian spoken here is said to resembles Jakarta's colloquial Indonesian. This study will try to observe the characteristics by examining personal pronoun, discourse particles, negation, voice (variations of meN-), possessive form, address terms and the usage of preposition sama. The variations of meN- and the multi-fuctional use of sama seem to be the same features that can be observed throughout Indonesia. Some personal pronouns (kamu orang, kita orang, dia orang), discourse particles (geh, tah), negation form (mak), and the borrowing of some regional terms of address (uda, mang) appear to be the variations of Indonesian varieties in Lampung.

Data in this study are taken from some transcriptions of conversations, free monologues/dialogues, etc. There are also some sample sentences to support some matter on grammatical function. Monologues data taken from Jackal and Crow narrations will also be discussed, but unfortunately almost all the informants used standard Indonesian (bahasa baku) when telling the story.
